

Gap Year Programs

By Susanna de Chenonceau, M.Ed., College Counselor

A gap year is a year off from school, usually taken between graduating high school and starting college. Popular activities during a gap year include doing research, volunteering, and traveling. Gap year programs can last anywhere from 3 to 12 months, and often include hands-on learning in different parts of the world. Typically you apply to college with your class and then “defer” your acceptance by a year while you go and do your gap year program or combination of several programs.

Here is a list of gap year programs recommended by college guidance professionals.
